On May 18th, Roman musician, Luca Bash, released his summer EP titled, The Single Drops, a project that blends together the indie folk and singer-songwriter genres. Musically, Luca is very talented and has a strong presence on each tune. Along the lines of a Dave Matthews or John Mayer, Luca Bash seems to know who he is as a musician and doesn't try to stray or venture too far from his "lane". His new EP showcases his strengths in the areas of songwriting and composition.

Of the songs on this release, "Black Swan's Walls" is my favorite. I like the upbeat moods and overall feel of the music and really enjoyed the guitar work. It's very well played and arranged. The only issue I have with Luca's EP is that, I cannot understand anything he's saying due to the heavy accent he has. It doesn't mean he's not a great musician, it's just very hard to make out what he's saying most of the time. Perhaps it would have been best for Luca to have sung the songs in his native language, versus doing a version in English? Either way, the music's cool.

Overall, The Single Drops, might appeal to the indie folk and singer-songwriter fans of the world who can appreciate great sounding music. I'd recommend taking a listen to Luca Bash's release to see for yourself just how talented he is.
