

four previous EPs Cyan, Magenta, Yellow, and Key Black along with one new song. Bash does a fine job of keeping the sound varied, something that can be a challenge when you’re flying solo with an acoustic guitar. Well, he is helped out by an old friend named Giovanni Pes, but it is all acoustic guitars.

On “Forever Asleep,” Bash’s vocals adeptly convey the songs emotional depth and are emphasized when he hits the upper registers. “Dear John,” on the other hand, gets a touch bluesy, but within the confines of the acoustic guitars. Vocally, his Italian accent sounds almost Jamaican on this one though the track itself does not sound Caribbean.

There’s a bit of a Spanish feel to “Little Tate,” which is something the casual fan of acoustic music might expect at some point. It doesn’t pervade the whole song and simply provides some flavor.

“Black Swan’s Walls” proves to be the rockiest song, recalling ‘70s era singer-songwriters like Cat Stevens or a stripped-down Loggins and Messina. It would be interesting to hear this track with more instrumentation though it works perfectly fine in this pared down format.

The new track of the bunch, and presumptive single, is “Your Tomorrow.” It doesn’t grab you immediately, but Bash’s impassioned vocal and partner’s detailed playing allow it to take root, much like the other songs in the collection.

About the Beast

Pop Culture Beast was formed in 2007 as a place for founder Garon Cockrell to write about his love of entertainment. Since then, the site has grown in readership and staff by providing an unbiased and independent view of popular culture from movies to music to games to books and everything in between.

Pop Culture Beast is your source for news, reviews, opinion, and commentary from a variety of perspectives from across the country. We're completely independent with no corporate influence so you can be sure that the reviews you read are unbiased and come from real people who love pop culture as much as Garon does.

We have premium ad space available on the home page and sponsorship available on The Pop Culture Beast Show, our hilarious and popular podcast (formerly known as SHOW). For more information, contact Garon (at) PopCultureBeast (dot) com.
